Q: Was Allen W. Dulles, the late CIA director, a rich man?

A: Yes, he was. It is hard to ascertain just how much he gave away before his death in 1969, but he still left an estate valued at something near half a million dollars. His vast library (along with his personal papers) was valued conservatively as being worth $42,724, including a start on a book he was writing on Communist subversion.
